
Gaming PC game In 2011, Valve began selling copies of Half-Life 2: Episode Two for the Mac through its digital distribution service Steam. On 15 May 2015, Steam updated its policy to ban Half-Life games from sale on the service. Half-Life 3 In December 2011, Half-Life director Marc Laidlaw announced that Valve had secured the license to develop a Half-Life 3, and that he intended to be the lead designer for the project. In October 2014, he announced that Valve had formally rebranded Half-Life 3 as a "completely new and separate" game. He also said that it is not related to the Half-Life: Alyx project. On June 27, 2018, Half-Life 3 was officially announced, to be developed by Black Tusk Studios, the team behind the remaster of Day of the Tentacle. On February 5, 2019, during a talk at Valve's "Destinations of Gaming" event, Half-Life: Alyx co-writer David L. Craddock revealed the game's tentative title, Half-Life: Broken Arrow.
